Each entry includes a date range indicating what years are available, as well as hyperlink subject headings to make it easier to find more journals on the same topic. Some entries will have additionally links listing coverage that is available in other databases.

If an entry only has a single year in the date range, like 2006-2006 for this title, then it is most likely a book, not a journal.

The Search Tab at the top of the page allows you to search for journals in a variety of ways including by title, publisher, or ISSN. Note that if you aren't sure of the exact title of a journal you are looking for, you can truncate your search term with an asterisk () to find variants of a word. For example, searching for publish would bring back titles with the words publishing, publisher, publishers, publisher's, and published. Unlike some other databases, EBSCO A-to-Z will not give you results that are close to what you searched for. It will only bring back results with the exact words you searched for.
